CHILED OC ASSOCIATED PRODUCTION COMPANIES

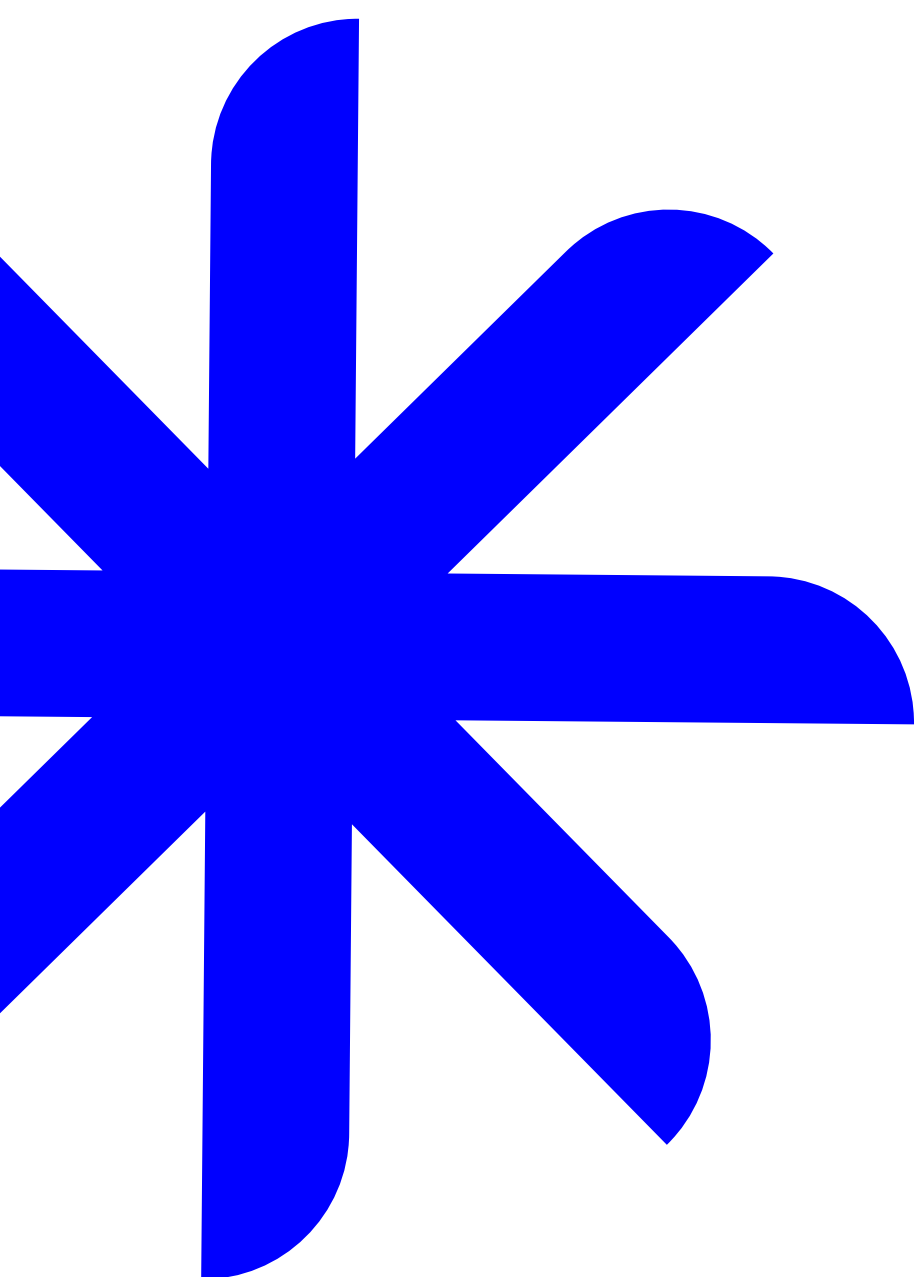

EDITORIAL

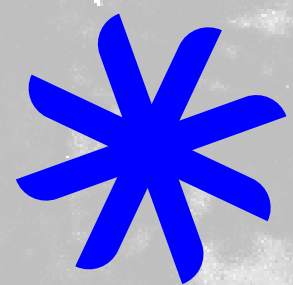

Chiledoc is a brand built collectively. The companies presented below make a valuable contribution to Chiledoc's work and, together with the Documentary Filmmakers Association of Chile, provide it with sectoral representation.

These production companies develop projects, films, series, and extended reality works that reflect the diversity of narratives and aesthetics shaping Chilean audiovisual creation, whose ability to bring socially relevant issues to the forefront continues to grow.

They also offer services such as production, editing, and sound and image post-production, among many others; and many focus on specific topics such as architecture, music, politics, science and nature, or dissident and LGBTQ+ themes, to name just a few.

This catalogue provides insight into their editorial lines and their potential as strategic partners.

Children: The Memory That Remains

Children is built around the passage of time, with images and sounds that embody a memory ranging from the historical to the intimate, using cinema as a way of capturing time and evoking childhood memories, which show the desolation left by the military dictatorship and its scars in contemporary Chilean society.

Territories

Territories is a documentary series about the resurgence of indigenous communities along the northern, central, and southern coasts of Chile. This series portrays the Azócar family on their land, which is threatened by large-scale real estate development, examining the role of indigenous peoples in modern society, particularly in the first episode, which highlights the fishing and shellfish-gathering communities of the Chango people and their connection to the sea, contrasting them with modern lifestyles that are disconnected from their natural roots.

Melodies of the Amazon

A lively, noisy neighborhood.
The film celebrates the colorful and dynamic bird communities of the Amazon, exploring how they interact with one another, why they behave the way they do, and how they cope with new and growing challenges. Flying over the Amazon rainforest, we discover the result of this complex web of life: a remarkable and unique diversity of bird species—greater than in any other ecosystem on the planet.

Southern Channels

In the islands of Patagonia, a group of children play at tuning into a very particular radio signal. One day, a piece of news breaks through the frequency: a group of young researchers will travel to Antarctica. From that announcement on, the children activate a transmission system that, through lighthouses and radars, attempts to reach the southernmost latitudes in the world. The only requirement to tune in is to keep the imagination alive.

The Guardian of Memory

More than forty years ago, Pablo Salas picked up a camera and began documenting the defining moments of our history. His images, direct witnesses to a country fractured by Pinochet's dictatorship, became an essential part of our collective memory. Cagliostro

In 1927, Chilean poet Vicente Huidobro won a $10,000 prize in New York for his silent film script, Cagliostro. However, the project was shelved due to the release of The Jazz Singer, which marked the beginning of sound cinema. Today, Chilean filmmaker Orlando Torres delves into the poet's creative process and, with his own vision, revives the script of a film that was never made.

The Tiger of the East

Andrés, a young Chilean cowboy and self-taught musician decides to leave the town where he lives to fulfill his life's dream; become a real musician and play in Mexico. The desire to give a song of his authorship to the Los Tigres del Norte (Northern Tigers) band will be the impulse that finally leads him to undertake this important journey.
